Sunday, August 11th

The taranta (tarantella) movement was born in the heart of southern Italy, the region of Puglia. It embodies years of rich tradition and mythology. The tarantella dance itself was known to be the cure for those bitten by a tarantula, particularly women. The only way to sweat out the poison of the spider was to dance. The result was a mad gyration as musicians played an upbeat tune and sang.

The last several years have seen a rebirth in this historically significant dance.

With initiatives like Taranta Power, started by Edoardo Bennato, a new generation of taranta musicians is emerging across both the southern and northern parts of Italy. It has called for musicians to revisit their roots and project an essential image of Italian musical culture to the rest of the world.
